Indianapolis -- The Corydon Group, LLC announces the formation of a health care practice group and names veteran health care lobbyist, Louis M. Belch, president of the division and in charge of day-to-day operations.

“I am excited to join an innovative firm that is experiencing the kind of growth and recognition that The Corydon Group has enjoyed over the past several years,” said Belch. The Corydon Group is a boutique, yet full-service, governmental-affairs firm located in downtown Indianapolis with clients ranging from the most well-known Fortune 500 companies to smaller Indiana-based trade associations.

“Lou is a great addition to our team of professionals and allows us to market our firm in the highly specialized area of health care advocacy, an arena to this point, in which we have played a limited role,” said firm partner Chris Gibson. The firm’s other partner, Mike Leppert, added, “Lou brings an impressive Statehouse resume, track record of success, and book of business to The Corydon Group from day one on the job. Needless to say, we welcome Lou’s experience as our firm explores this new practice area.”

The Corydon Group is Indiana’s largest independently owned governmental-affairs firm with more than 30 clients, 6 professionals approaching 100 collective years of experience, and one of the most prominent Statehouse profiles of any firm in Indianapolis. Belch has been a fixture at the Indiana General Assembly since 1989 when he was the legislative liaison for the Indiana Health Professions Bureau. Lou was named legislative liaison for the Indiana State Medical Association in 1991 and has been a contract lobbyist specializing in health care clients since 1997.
